The migration is a moving herd, not a scheduled event. Herds reach the Mara in July, but crossings depend on rain, grass and predator pressure.

Many travellers book August expecting daily crossings and Learn more here leave disappointed. A better plan is three or four nights with a flexible guide and no fixed expectation.

Outside July to October, the Mara still delivers excellent big cat viewing because resident predators stay. Judge an itinerary by guiding quality and area, not by migration promises. Honest timing notes are at %LINK%.
