When playing Limbo, the user chooses a target multiplier (e.g., 2x, 50x, and even 1,000 x) and positions a bet utilizing cryptocurrency. The game then creates a random multiplier outcome. One of the most essential aspects of the Limbo crypto game is the relationship between the target multiplier and the actual chance of winning. Due to the fact that the game includes an integrated house edge (usually around 1% to 2%), the win opportunity is somewhat lower than pure probability suggests.

The following table highlights how target multipliers correlate with win portions and prospective payouts on a theoretical £ 10 bet (assuming a 1% house edge).

Table: Limbo Multipliers, Win Chances, and Payouts (£ 10 Bet Example)

Target Multiplier	Mathematical Probability	Actual Win Chance (with House Edge)	Payout on a £ 10 Bet	Net Profit
1.05 x	95.23%	94.28%	£ 10.50	£ 0.50
2.00 x	50.00%	49.50%	£ 20.00	£ 10.00
5.00 x	20.00%	19.80%	£ 50.00	£ 40.00
10.00 x	10.00%	9.90%	£ 100.00	£ 90.00
50.00 x	2.00%	1.98%	£ 500.00	£ 490.00
100.00 x	1.00%	0.99%	£ 1,000.00	£ 990.00
1,000.00 x	0.10%	0.099%	£ 10,000.00	£ 9,990.00

As seen in the table, lower multipliers offer regular small wins, while higher multipliers provide rare, life-altering payouts.
