One Cardiff homeowner gathered quotes from somewhere between eight and ten roofers before deciding who to trust with the job. That's more homework than most people do, but it shows how hard it can be to tell good roofers in Cardiff from the ones who leave you with a bigger problem. The customer in question chose Redland Roofing Cardiff, a family-owned firm based in Rumney with over 30 years in the trade. Whoever you end up hiring, the checks below will help you avoid getting caught out. Start with insurance. Any roofer working on your home should be able to confirm they carry proper cover, because roofing involves height, weight and weather, and accidents can damage property as well as people. Redland Roofing Cardiff is fully insured for residential roofing installation, repair and replacement, and backs its workmanship with a guarantee. Next, look at reviews on more than one platform. A firm with a long record on Google, plus listings on Checkatrade, MyBuilder or Trustpilot, is far harder to fake than a single glowing comment. Read the reviews themselves, not just the stars, and look for patterns in what people say. Ask whether you'll see what's happening on the roof. A good roofer will show you photos of the problem before work begins and of the finished result afterwards. Customers of Redland Roofing Cardiff often mention being sent before-and-after photos and videos during a job, which matters when you can't climb up and check for yourself. Get every quote in writing, and ask whether the figure could change once work starts. Be wary of anyone who knocks on your door after a storm in Heath or Cathays offering a cheap fix on the spot. Local roofers who have worked across Cardiff for years, from the terraces of Roath to the 1930s semis of Llanishen, have a reputation they need to protect.
