The Mara river carries the famous crossings, with points near the Mara bridge and Click here to find out more the northern conservancies. The Talek river is smaller and crossings there are quicker but less dramatic.

Mara crossing sites draw the crowds in August, sometimes dozens of vehicles at one bend. Talek sites are quieter and often better for photography, though herd numbers are lower.

Both depend on rain upstream. A dry week can empty a crossing point completely. Choose a camp within reach of both rivers if crossings matter to you, and keep plans flexible. Route options are at %LINK%.
