

Federal Inmate Texting App: What Families Need to Know Before Sending Your First Message

How a Federal Inmate Text App Works

A federal inmate messaging app lets loved ones send short messages to a person in federal custody through a platform that the Bureau of Prisons permits. Unlike ordinary texting, these services run on monitored systems, so messages are logged under facility policy. Access depends on the individual's account status, and prepaid balances are typically funded before use.

Choosing a Safe and Legitimate Option

Start by checking the facility's list of authorized providers and the BOP inmate locator at bop.gov to confirm the inmate's current facility. Avoid websites that promise secret access or ask for an inmate's login credentials, since these are common scam tactics. Review pricing, refund terms, and privacy policies before you enter payment details, and use a unique, hard-to-guess password for your account.

Staying Compliant With Prison Policy

Keep messages respectful and brief, and avoid discussing active legal cases, because reviewed communications can be referenced during reviews. Confirm which contacts are permitted and review the guidelines for media before sending them. For the most up-to-date information, contact the facility's inmate services office and compare options before you commit to a paid plan.
